

Holidays and travel after brain injury

Holiday organisers are increasingly considering the needs and wants of disabled people. There are, however, steps you can take to help ensure your holiday goes as smoothly as possible.

Before you go

- It is important to check that the holiday insurance policy covers any aids or equipment that you might need to take with you.
- Do ensure that you have a good supply of medication and necessary aids and equipment to last you for your stay. Medicines and tablets should be clearly labelled.
- If in doubt, check with your doctor that it is safe for you to fly.
- You should check any special health requirements for the countries you are visiting. Vaccination may be required, or advisable, against certain diseases.
- Do ensure that you contact those concerned (airline, railway, accommodation) well in advance if you have any special requirements. Don't assume that staff members will know and understand your needs, make sure you tell them!
- Allow enough time for boarding - you may not follow the same procedure as everyone else.
- Consider the security of your home whilst you are away. You may wish to make arrangements for somebody you trust to visit your home whilst you are away for security reasons.

Funding for holidays

Under Section 2 of the Chronically Sick and Disabled Act 1970, any disabled person or family with a disabled member has the right to approach their local Social Services department concerning assistance in making holiday arrangements. Unfortunately, in practice, holidays are often a low priority for Social Services due to budget restrictions – but it is always worth asking.

Possible sources of help include organisations set up to look after members of a particular group and their family. Professional bodies often have funding available for members and their dependants. Trade Unions have similar schemes.

Local charities may be able to help. The local public reference library and local CVS (Council for Voluntary Service) are good sources of information on the charities in your area. There are some trusts that consider applications for financial assistance towards the cost of a holiday - see Useful organisations for details. For more information on possible sources of funding contact our freephone Helpline.

Travel insurance

All too often standard travel insurance will not cover people with a “pre-existing medical condition or defect”, however there are specialist insurance companies that do. The companies listed below all provide insurance cover for travellers with a disability. Headway does not endorse any of these companies – their details are provided for information purposes only. Shop around to get the best possible cover for your situation, and be sure any policy you do take out meets your needs.

Remember, if you don't declare everything about your medical history, the company may refuse to pay out if you make a claim.
